Last week, a Falcon 9 rocket delivered a batch of satellites to orbit for Iridium Communications – and the next on its list of customers is NASA. On Wednesday, SpaceX launched the 16th and last of its Falcon 9 rockets from Cape Canaveral, Fla., carrying the Air Force's NROL-61 radio communications mission into orbit. The 16th mission – scheduled for launch no earlier than 1 a.m. Sunday – will be used to demonstrate the readiness of SpaceX's rocket for satellite launch and the company's efforts to deploy a satellite internet system by 2015. "We're really only a few days away from the final launch for SpaceX's Falcon 9," said John Elbon, director of business development for SpaceX's advanced programs, in an interview with GeekWire. Elbon says SpaceX is already working on the next flight. "We're planning the fourth flight of the year, which would be in less than a month," Elbon said. Elbon refused to reveal the satellite payload of the fourth flight, which is tentatively scheduled for Aug. 1. The 32nd Falcon 9 rocket, carrying 11 satellites for SpaceX's planned $1.6 billion satellite internet project, is scheduled to launch from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California on Sept. 25.

Elbon says SpaceX has flown more than 70 missions since 2010 and continues to make good on its promise to fly its rockets and recover its boosters 90 percent of the time. SpaceX also continues to work with the Air Force, which was the first customer to receive a Falcon 9. SpaceX agreed to buy the first batch of re-used rocket boosters from NASA, which used to launch the U.S. space shuttle program, to help cover the expense of the rocket program. "It's been a very positive experience so far," Elbon 648931e174

The SDM-F is a 501c3 non-profit corporation whose primary purpose is to support and find a permanent resting place for the remains of those who served in our country's military and who gave their lives in support of our freedoms. In recent years the San Diego area has lost more than 25% of the National Guard and active duty personnel, leaving thousands of family members to face uncertainty regarding their loved one's final resting place. The San Diego Memorial Foundation is one of only a few fundraising organizations dedicated to finding burial space for our war dead. So, when a planning committee was formed to review the criteria and process for selecting a suitable location, I looked at the evidence and recommendations from the San Diego County Public Health Department (STD) and the San Diego County Veterans Cemetery (SDCVC). I learned of the newly approved National Cemetery site near the home of Col. Richard D. Stevenson, an officer in the Grey Fox Golf and Country Club who died in 2003. Col. Stevenson left a lasting legacy to the community in his dedicated work for the SDM-F and his family. After years of dedicated service to our country, Col. Stevenson, his wife, and their children created the Stevenson Family Memorial Golf Course with the help of several fellow citizens of San Diego. The 18th hole's Cabrillo Memorial Stone (for those who served during the Vietnam War) is the only memorial of its kind left in the county. At the same time, the SDCVC was seeking to reach out to other veterans in need of memorialization. The Veterans Gravesite Committee (VGC) was formed to fulfill that need. At the same time Col. Stevenson's family initiated the Education and Training Division, enabling children of our military to learn about the importance of a national cemetery to veterans' final resting places. The committee, which included several members of the San Diego County
